A brief history

Built in 1791, this listed property, was in the past a haunt of Royalty and Aristocracy, and still retains many of the original features that have been painstakingly refurbished throughout.

In its previous heyday, during the early 1800's, the Hotel was frequented by leading society figures. Royal patronage to the area came with Caroline, Princess of Wales, wife of the heir apparent (later George IV), who began visiting in the early 1800's.

Lady Hamilton, best remembered as Admiral Horatio Nelson's mistress, also visited many times during the Season. In 1805 she hosted a grand dinner party, ball and supper in honour of Nelson in the ballroom. Just a few months later he was killed at The Battle of Trafalgar.

Local Historian, Ian Yearsley, in his book 'Southend in 50 Buildings' described The Royal Hotel as "... arguably the most important building in the whole of the borough... Without it, 'South End' may have remained a fishing hamlet."
